Can you give some specifics about, when you mean a forbearance can be applied without contacting the servicer. Q. Oh can a borrower request a forbearance without making a phone call to the servicer or talking to the servicer on the phone? A. We are speaking about a borrower making a request. Then the borrower can contact the servicer, either in writing or a phone call, are the ways that there has to be some contact for a forbearance to be applied. Q. That makes sense. Is it possible for a borrower to apply for a forbearance through servicer websites? A. Yes. Q. And in that circumstance, could a borrower obtain a forbearance without speaking on the phone with the servicer? A. Yes; in that circumstance it could, yes.	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21	BATTLE Q. Electronically on the web A. Yes. Q potentially? A. Either one of those ways, sure. Q. Or through various servicer notices? A. Through notices, through the websites, or and, of course, through phone calls. Q. So the Department doesn't rely exclusively on phone calls to provide information to borrowers about repayment options? A. Oh, not yeah, that's one way to notify a borrower, sure. Q. Through the phone? A. Through the phone, sure. Q. But also there are ways to do it through other disclosures? A. The tools or other disclosures, sure. Q. Ms. Matthews asked you about the benefits of income-driven repayment plans. A. Yes. Q. Are there any downsides in income-driven repayment plans from the Department's perspective?
